Love takes a loner and a grieving mother by surprise...

Farm labourer, Bluey (Lachlan Murdoch), has been travelling for twenty years, constantly on the move to forget the death of his baby girl.

Dairy farmer, Helen Wilson, is barely keeping her head above water. Her fifteen-year-old son suicided and her older son flees the area looking for paid work to help keep the farm. When a neighbour gifts her three months of Bluey's time, it's a lifeline.

Bluey admires Helen's fierce defence of her boys. Helen appreciates Bluey's quiet presence and his daily acts of kindness. When desire enters the mix, Bluey worries he's taking advantage. Helen feels guilty about forgetting her boys, even for a moment.

Commitment isn't in Bluey's playbook. Helen's struggling to navigate grief. Baring one's soul, even sharing one's body, is easier with a deadline.

But with the clock ticking down, what risks are they prepared to take with their hearts?

"I love that the main characters are both over forty and getting a second chance at love, and their chemistry really came across in the narrative.

An emotional and engaging read"

Goodreads ★★★★★☆

"The Anderson Sisters? Absolute icons of meddling. The kind of women who would "accidentally" lock you in a pantry with your ex because "you two need to talk."

Bookbub ★★★★★☆

"when I read the last page I just wanted to hug them and say thank you for being raw, real, emotional and identifiable 🥹 grief is hard and it changes you, it can swallow you whole but sometimes you can rise from it , not forget but live it..."
